

2020 Andert Ruländer

Neusiedlersee, Austria

Just a few hundred meters from the Hungarian border and just East of lake Neusiedl, lies the small town of Pamhagen. Brothers Erich and Michael Andert have been Demeter Certified since 2003 and their whole property is buzzing with life. Nearly everything on the property seems edible. Walking around the vineyard you can find large glass jars of fermenting vegetables or open a random door by a shed and find meats smoking and curing. Herbs of all sorts (Michael is a certified herb educator) hang from the rafters and there are countless tinctures littering the cellar floor. Erich and Michael are also consummate hosts. The dinner salad from exclusively from their cover crops, local pumpkin seed oil for dressing, and every following dish comes with simple preparation done to perfection. There's an attention to detail, not overworked or made too complicated, and always with the best ingredients. The joy of sharing a table with them is the same as sharing a bottle of wine. Upon our last visit they were gearing up to host children from the Vienna International School to promote Demeter certified products, harvest and cook with the children, and ultimately raise awareness and money for charity. This mindset speaks to everything that they do. As Michael told us, "We go inside the life."

VINEYARDS

Right out in the middle of their 4.5 hectares is giant chicken, goose, and duck coop. Just a few meters from there, there's an area devoted to sheep. All are used for bolster the biodiversity of the property, supply fertilizer, and of course add to future dinner menus. Horns from years of biodynamic preparations are fixed along the fence line and hides of wild boars hang nearby to deter the deer. Depending on the year, the most potent spraying they have to do is horsetail tea.

WINE MAKING

All wines are hand harvested, sometimes destemmed, open vat fermentation, always native yeast, no temperature control, little to no racking, and everything is aged in oak barrels. Wines are bottled without filtration and total SO2 is about 15-20ppm. No other additions are made. Inside their traditional underground stone cellar, there is no electricity. The wines are free to evolve and develop without interference.

NOTES & PAIRINGS

This is something we first tried years ago as a visit only treat. Never thought we'd ever get our hands on it. Ruländer is what their grandfather preferred to call the grape instead of Grauburgunder or Pinot Gris. The story is that a man named Mr. Rüländ arrived from Germany hundreds of years ago and introduced the grape to the region. Erich and Michael have been making this skin macerated version since 2006. Hand picked, 5 days of maceration followed by 9 months in barrel. Bottled unfiltered and with zero additions of any kind. Due to their farming there's plenty of ripeness, but the alcohol and acidity (9 g/l!) bring remarkable balance. This is a completely different animal than the Ramatos from Italy/Slovenia or the more volcanic skin versions coming from the Mátra. This is also usually bottled after flowering, but Michael had an injury and bottling had to be pushed to late June. The wine got a little wild in barrel and Erich referred to it as "L'enfant terrible." It has since calmed down in bottle thanks in part to our broken supply chain.
